

How to be Successful with Homework Assignments

These are some items for you to consider when you are doing your homework assignments. The important thing to remember is that your assignments are essentially requirements for a report and not simply a collection of "homework" questions like you have had in other classes. This means that your result will be a report and not a list of answers to exercises:

- Therefore, please do not copy the questions from the assignment into your report. You should have headings (using the Heading styles in Word). The headings and narrative you add to the document will make the sections obvious as to which question you are responding.
- Please add narratives to your sections, subsections, figure explanations, etc. For example, don't just list actors. You need to explain to the reader what this is about. For example, "This section/subsection is a result of our use-case analysis where we have identified the users (actors) for the proposed system..." (You use own wording and style of course). You can even embellish a bit because this is a case study and there may be some information that you have to assume.
- I expect to see a table of contents in these documents when there are multiple sections. If you are using the headings from Word, then you can automatically generate the table of contents.
- You should treat this like a work assignment that you might have on the job. This is a good time to practice your writing and document formatting skills.
- Please use the features of Word such as captions for figures and tables. You can easily reference these within your narratives.
- Please use the same cover page with your icon on each assignment

Remember that your document is a tool for communication to a team of technical people, but also business people. So you should make sure that your reports reflect that a diverse audience will be reading them.

This assignment focuses on writing a System Vision Document for the "Spring Breaks 'R' Us Travel Service" at the end of Chapter 2 of the textbook. Perform the following activities as part of the assignment:

- Read the case study for the fictitious company of "Spring Breaks 'R' Us Travel Service"
- Based on the case study, create a System Vision Document using the outline in Figure 1-8 in chapter 1 in the textbook. Include sections for the Problem Description, System Capabilities, and Business Benefits. You should include at least one paragraph for the problem description, five capabilities and five business benefits for the sections respectively. Your format should be the same as in the figure. You should use the title & heading formats in Word for the headers and titles. Also, you should find a logo symbol to use for your SBRU company. The vision document should fit on one page.
- Upload completed assignment in Word document form
